"MERCURY AND THE LITTLE MYSTERIES/BONUS VERSION"

MERCURY AND THE LITTLE MYSTERIES was inspired by weekly three hour seaside treks at a bird refuge. Time and temperature combined to mark passages and discoveries. MERCURY I is a large oil painting which serves as a kind of base line for the small THE LITTLE MYSTERIES, small satellite egg tempera collages suspended in translucent bags as a temporal form of evidence of those fleeting moments. OPENING ARIL 18TH

WE SEA

My interest in mermaids came about ten years ago with an email announcement for an exhibition of paintings about Mami Wata, the African water goddess.

Coupled with the fact I spent every summer at the beach, and then mostly in the ocean, I spent many hours diving and imagining myself a dolphin.
When I was in delivery with my son, I got over the fear and pain by imagining myself in a river of females of all time, just floating and flowing with that river and all the pain passed by. I have no idea where that notion came from. Somehow reading about Mami Wata many years later, something connected. She was known as the "originator, generatrix, the mother, the mother of the gods, the mateless one". Through research of this small selection of images, many of these are goddesses of fertility and motherhood. I do have a hunch many of these goddesses were shifted to sirens, or beautiful creatures used to lure men to their deaths, when a shift to patriarchal societies replaced goddess worship.

The research of Mami Wata led me not only to these other myths, a few of whom are later incarnations of Mami Wata herself, as she was worshiped from Africa to Turkey and was perhaps the first incarnation of Isis in Egypt, but also to searching for a scientific basis for these myths. One of the books was a book suggesting an aquatic beginning entitled THE AQUATIC APE by Elaine Morgan, writer and evolutionary anthropologist. Her work and the work of her predecessors is still obviously controversial, but is heralded by the likes of Sir Richard Attenborough.

Investigating these world wide myths and seeing the similarities in stories has me certain the search of these mysteries has just begun.

"falling" a solo show, 3/7-4/12

Falling

Falling's weightlessness is a troubled one It's not like the airtime of up-drafting hawks or homosapient gliders hung on wires under silk billows out of their element snubbing gravity putting on airs, nor like the honking camaraderie of southbound geese chasing solar flares

To know that speeding mass in collusion with collision brings bereavement in worlds of muscle blood and bone is usually enough to keep most breathers from dancing on edges or diving off ledges

By a wise prescience we understand that freefall without orbit must be a heavy weightlessness no matter how long its freedom lasts if gravity's die is cast

Bodies are more fragile than stone and steel.
In falling minds minutes are surreal and time expands as down mind coasts

-as future shortens past grows richer and now's edge is honed so fine as to split the hairs of ghosts, and life 's full-tipped to spill last hours out which cling to sides of tissue pitchers

Past becomes a fuller world, more here, which is why old fallers often go there more than fresh fallers do, who, still green, in exhilarated falling feel only wind in hair the sheen of mornings crisp and new being blessed to not fully grasp that they are falling too
